

Seminar Series

TEACHING THE LAW

Can you kill two birds with one stone? Using and contributing to pedagogical literature

Have you ever tried something new in your teaching, only to discover a major unexpected problem? Educators spend considerable time and effort in developing, implementing and refining teaching methodologies. The experiences of other can often be used to ensure this effort, and your teaching, are as efficient and effective as possible. In this seminar Dr Terry Hutchinson and Professor Mark Israel will discuss how you can access and use pedagogical literature, and how you might maximise your benefit by publishing the results of your teaching endeavours. There will also be an opportunity to workshop projects which are 'on the go'.

Please join us for a fascinating presentation and an opportunity to discuss this interesting subject with your colleagues.

Speaker: Dr Terry Hutchinson, Queensland University of Technology

Dr Hutchinson serves on the Executive of the Australasian Law Teachers' Association (ALTA) and is immediate past Editor in Chief of the Legal Education Review, and current Associate Editor of that journal.

Speaker: Professor Mark Israel, Flinders University

Professor Israel won the Prime Minister's Award for Australian University Teacher of the Year in 2004 and has been awarded an Associate Fellowship by the Australian Learning and Teaching Council (formerly the Carrick Institute).

Speaker: Anne Hewitt, University of Adelaide

Anne is a Lecturer at the University of Adelaide with a keen interest in learning and teaching. She has completed a Graduate Certificate in Higher Education, and published a number of articles on teaching.

Venue: Margaret Murray Room, Level 4, Union House, University of Adelaide

Date: 2-4pm Friday 19 June 2009. The seminar will be followed by drinks.

Please RSVP to: anne.hewitt@adelaide.edu.au for catering purposes.